WAINSWRIGHT, Thos. Francis America

Born at Exeter in 1809, came to America in 1882, and died at Boston, July 14, 1887. Thus he was born a little later and died considerably earlier than Cooper, who nearly attained to the longevity attributed to Titian.

While Cooper painted chiefly in oils, Wainwright was better known as a water-colorist, and in this pre-eminently British medium of art he attained greater proficiency than those would suspect who have only seen the pictures signed by his name, which from time to time have been imported here. For his best work the lovers of large landscapes and cattle pieces in water colors had to wait until he died.

SCHOLZ, Richard

Europe

Born in Hanover, 1860. Pupil of Hildebrandt. Highest medals, Berlin, Munich, Breslau, and Chicago. "Genoveva" (St. Genevieve) exhibited in Paris Salon with highest honors, also at St. Petersburg, Berlin, Dresden, Munich, Breslau, Hamburg, Hanover and Frankfort.

Size, 60 x 87.

"Legend of St. Genevieve."

Genevieve was the wife of a Grand Duke of feudal times, noted for her beauty and virtue. The Grand Duke was called to battle and left his dukedom and wife in the care of his brother. The brother, a wicked libertine became enamored of Genevieve and did all he could to make her untrue to the absent Duke, going even so far as, that he told her the Duke had been killed in battle. Genevieve refused to believe and remained faithful, which so angered the brother-in-law, that he told her if she continued to resist him, he would banish her to the heart of a dense forest, there to die of exposure and starvation. Genevieve preferred banishment to infidelity was therefore taken to a forest never entered by man and left to her fate. She lived upon herbs and wild berries and a doe she tamed gave her milk and there it was she gave birth to her little child, a boy, to whom she gave the expressive name of "Schmerzensreich," which means "the realm of pain." Some years later, her husband, the Grand Duke, who supposed his wife long dead, penetrated deeper than he knew whilst out hunting into the forest and there it was he discovered his faithful wife and beautiful sunny haired son and heir. The Germans call her "Saint Genevieve," as just reward for her fidelity and fortitude prompting her to gladly choose her terrible fate to infidelity. The picture portrays her resigned to the fate of the Almighty in all the dignity and elevated beauty of her pure heart, the guileless little child clinging to her skirt, absorbed with his sole play thing a bird's nest, walking in a flower covered glade in the very heart of a primeval forest. Of this pictured legend Hanfstaengel has sold thousands of photographs, in fact there is scarcely a Home in Germany where "Scholz's Genoveva" is not known and prized.

Sold by order of Mrs. A. E. Martinsen.

Size, 68 x 80.

One of this artists strongest pictures. Exhibited in Berlin, Dresden, Frankfort with Honors.

Portrays the interior of a carpenters' shop and tells its own story of the old man's exhaustion from long hours and hard work. He is too weary to take the jacket held for him by the young apprentice. "The masterful handling of this subject strikes all who see it," was the criticism of press and laymen.

WAINEWRIGHT, Thos, Turner America

Born at Exeter, in 1809, came to America in 1882, and died at Boston July 14, 1887. Thus he was born a little later and died considerably earlier than Cooper, who nearly attained to the longevity attributed to Titian.

While Cooper painted chiefly in oils, Wainwright was better known as a water-colorist, and in this pre-eminently British medium of art he attained greater proficiency than those would suspect who have only seen the pictures signed by his name, which from time to time have been imported here. For his best work the lovers of large landscapes and cattle pieces in water colors had to wait until he died.
